Schrödinger's Dog

In the ideal world I was curled up in front of a nice warm log fire dressed in my best Chrissy bow-tie.

In the alternative universe we were screeching through the Hindhead tunnel, when the Crap-Nav announced, "You have arrived at your destination!" Methinks we were somewhere beneath the hash trail.

We emerged and arrived at the NT car park in freezing rain to the sight of a puzzled Isnees staring at his mobile phone wondering why he couldn't get it to work in the wet.

That lovely Kelinchi and her rather fetching/ affectionate Mistress Pepper had laid a wonderful trail fit for the summertime. (She claimed it had been warm and sunny when she set it) It was complete with back-checks, 330 degree checks, views (apparently, when not misty) and leaves so deep they tickled my willy.

Doug The Tub made a brief appearance, checked back and wasn't seen again. He later claimed that another check had been marked in the opposite direction. I think he was just grumpy as usual. What is it about old men on the hash, eh? Grumpy Gerry was only spied at the end sampling the Biermeister's wares and Clever Trevor's wonderful vegetable soup. It was a small but intrepid pack that would shame the lily-livered youngsters.

I don't recall a circle. Was there one? Maybe it's because everyone retired quickly to the bar, where I could wrap myself up in a warm blanket.

Directions

From Dorking follow A25 West into you get to Gomshall. At Gomshall Mill (on South side of road) turn left into Goose Green to park.

From Guildford follow A25 East until you get to Gomshall, at Gomshall Mill turn right into Goose Green to park.

For those booked to dine park in the car park 50 yards on the right. For those drinking park further down Goose Green along verge.

Suggest booking tables for 13:30 for enough time to end hash, circle and change of clothes.

I understand the aim is to have a bar in the mill but do not know if it is in the same room as the previous one.

Stuff ... to be updated later.

As you all know the RS is not sent as an attachment, but as a link; Relative rather than Absolute (ish) so to speak.

Being available on line means it can be updated, in fact last week I corrected the "wrong way round" picture (I have NO IDEA how that happened!!), and added in the late arriving, and riveting (!), episode of "Lord Raleigh's" Hash Horse Homilies that I know you all so much appreciate.

This space may well be slightly better used in a later version / issue / iteration /...Who knows.

We shall remember Sunday December 18th for that utterly riveting football match, the most exciting I have ever watched, when Kelinchi's trail is only a distant memory. But it was a very good trail. We have been here often, and most of us have set runs here, the most memorable – because so confused – being that of a team assembled by CL, which included a view of the entrance to the road tunnel. For all that, much of our route today was largely unfamiliar. She had the good sense not to take us into the Punchbowl itself (it would have been very wet); we started instead on a path going south I have used myself for a return, but after that I recognised very little. The first few solutions were all on major paths, so the first time the answer was instead to disappear into the bushes by a very minor path, several of us were baffled; eventually Popeye did manage to rejoin us, but Tosser we never saw again. It was here that Atalanta caught us up, and spotted the little side path, by now lightly be-floured as a sign of solution, and soon we were back with the pack.

We were never numerous – perhaps 20 all told, at least 4 of those no longer runners, and I am uncertain where Silent Knight, Doug, (both dominant at the earlier checks) and Popeye – a late starter - left us. Belcher, the GM, perhaps Dormouse, and I believe Petal (who had been solving checks very successfully) accepted Kelinchi's short cut. Those whom the hare accompanied were Atalanta, Chastity Belt, 'IsKnees, Simple, and myself, and we took over 95 minutes for a trail said to be 4.75 miles long, suggesting we were rather slow. It did not feel like that.

The forecast had been appalling; in practice, while it did rain on us, the rain was never heavy, but it all felt much colder than the 8 degrees predicted. This rather spoilt what would have been attractive scenery. A good deal of the out-trail had been downhill, so we knew we would have to climb on the return; when I said as much to Popeye as a hill confronted us at a check he replied "Perhaps, but this is the wrong hill", and duly solved that check by going elsewhere. One for him and his knowledge of the area. Pepper went round again with her mistress, an enthusiastic companion to our adventures.

Russia's invasion of Ukraine was so blatantly unjustified that it is worth asking why so many nations, led by China and India, refused to condemn it. Part of the answer is precisely that leadership; China has acquired many clients (they would rather I wrote "Friends") in its bid for world control, and these states do not wish to offend their patron. Then there is worldwide hostility to the USA, the current hegemon, and so a reaction "Well, if the States are upset this must be good". And I suspect there is also a thought "This is a white man's war, what do we care?"

Political leaders in the Third World are probably more conscious than we that failed states – Libya, Iraq, Somalia, Syria – have been ruined by Western intervention, though in Syria the dictator is only in place thanks to Moscow. (The West is not responsible for the horrors in Yemen, a proxy war between Iran and Saudi Arabia.) The US has been world leader since 1918, and resentment is only natural, even if this means accepting far worse from Putin and Xi Jinping.
