A joke from Punch over a century ago : "How do I get to X?" "Well, I wouldn't start from here". Speedy Humper has used all the paths around this college; and sure enough the first two-thirds of Simple's trail were pure Speedy, if rather more urban than she would have chosen, with the usual sports field and the usual concrete lumps on a slope. Kelinchi, starting late, had caught us by then; prescient, or simply knowledgeable, she was soon far ahead, while Atalanta and Camping Gas solved checks in the usual way. Well, that brought us to Stoke Lock and the return south beside the River Wey; and at this stage Simple did offer a variant which previous hares had had the wit to avoid, namely an interminable trudge the other side of that river, with no prospect of a check or a break to the monotony until we came to the only bridge which could get us back over the river.

By then I was with Stevie Blunder and Three and Fourpence; the latter knew all the streets of northern Guildford, and we were soon back in the car park, on trail or not, finding Ms bean on the way; she had been well ahead, but Spud had got lost. (He was soon found). The other dog on the trail was Pepper, soon to be warmed by a handsome maroon coat with her name on it. She was well known to Camping Gas (or Gaz? That would be French, as is "camping", which in that language means camp-site, just as un parking is a car park, un skating an ice rink, un dancing a dance hall).

I should pay tribute to Tail End Charlie, who rarely appears in these columns, keeping up diligently, as did Bonn Bugle, who is mentioned more often.

I assume I am not the only driver in SH3 who uses the interchange A3 to M25: I found to my horror that the present congestion will last until the summer of 2025, which seems disastrous. In my own sector of civil engineering (tunnels) we worked 168 hours a week if necessary, and always night shifts, but for some reason road works are never completed like that. Better to irritate the public than depart from tradition.

As for the heading to this piece, imagine an optional comma after "that".

Jeremy Hunt's budget made no attempt to address global warming; to date, no government anywhere in the world has dared tell its citizens of the drastic lifestyle changes which human survival requires. Even Pakistan, which has already experienced a first taste of the horrors in store for us all, has yet to react maturely. It has appealed to the wealthy nations, the main sources of carbon emissions, for help; but I fear all countries, culprits or victims, will have to bite the bullet and tell people what they don't want to hear. Switching to electric cars is not much help: making them emits as much carbon as petrol or diesel cars emit when driven. No, we shall have to travel much less, and then by public transport, forget foreign holidays, abandon business flights, eat much less meat: well, you get the idea. Just what voters will resent; and even in China, where no one votes, the government does depend on the passivity of citizens. Try persuading people that "growth" is a mistake: a belief in growth is built into our brains. Well, into our social structures, the have-nots still believing they will one day be haves. Or better off, anyway.

Coronation Prep Repeat

A missive from Olive Oyl:

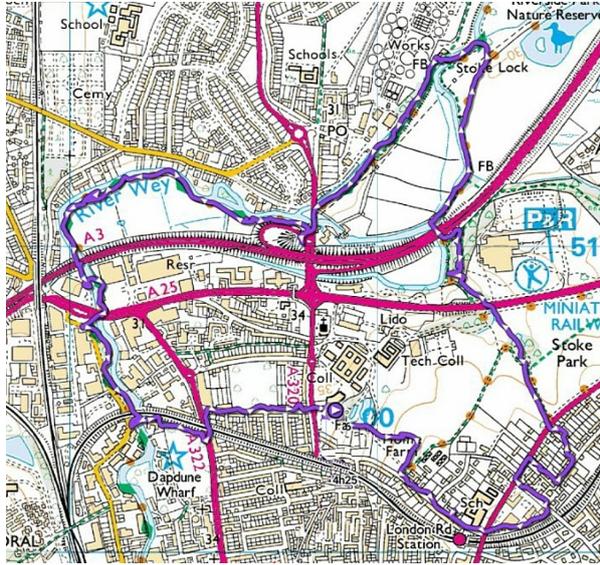

Here are pictures of samples/ideas for an SH3 Harriettes shirt for The King's coronation. About £19 for long sleeved polo shirts.

A range of colours are available from the Logo shop. They have catalogues for shirts with female fit and options such as long or short sleeves. The wording and official Corolean logo on the right side of the shirt would be better in dark on light colours and light on dark colours. (This is evident from these samples.) (!!!! Teq)

If there is any interest in having a shirt made up please discuss with Mrs G at the AGM, or Olive at a later date.

Orders would need to be in shortly after Easter for arrival before 6th May.

Peay "Peeps" on his annual visit...
Must be nearly the AGM!!!
