CHUNDEROS LAYS A CHEERFUL TRAIL TO A CHURCH

This report is largely in praise of Too Posh and of Tosser, who both have every right to be regarded as front foragers. Tosser never runs nowadays, but brings dedication and perseverance to being up out there, in the lead even if it means sacrificing a sip stop, while Too Posh, who does run at times, was today both prescient and determined.

With a strong presence from Old Coulsdon, parking today required ingenuity and double stacking, but it was all done with good humour. Bonn Bugle arrived just in time to say Go! at 11 am and Doug was soon climbing the hill past that chimney. Whatever works happened in that quarry are now just a dereliction. Popeye went wrong at the first check: he reports climbing the entire hill, and later finding only the short-cutters as his companions. Too Posh soon saw that Chunderos was as likely as Tequil'Over to lay back checks: besides, she had laid a trail here herself, and was soon leading us through head-high rapeseed of alarming extent. Would we ever get through it?

I am proud to report that I solved the next check, straight ahead for once; Proxy argued that he could do the same at the fourth, quite wrongly, but Tosser brought us to the Reigate Road (which featured in the hash last week) and thereafter we remained south of that road almost till the end.

The hare (hares?) included a long loop starting and ending at St Michael's church in Betchworth: it seems to have cemeteries to both north and south of it. A long stretch on roads brought us to a pub, the Red Lion, which featured in lockdown trails. Today we enjoyed Pimms and beer as a sip stop. Speedy poured out the Pimms with such devotion she left almost nothing for herself. The trail resumed along the boundary of a live cricket match |(the bowler kept delivering byes to the boundary) and then plunged once more into rapeseed. Well, no: a back check, and these wretched plants to one side of us, not both. This field too was of interminable length, Silent Knight battling on gamely., and whom should we find when we crossed the Reigate Road once more but the fierce Tosser? And Atalanta far ahead, leading us to the railway line and the long path to the south of it which, as in past trails here, brought us back to our start.

It seems unlikely that our Stone Age ancestors devoted much time or trouble to wondering which sex they were. This is a modern luxury, and I mean really modern: I suspect that social media are a significant factor. Oh, there were always a few, a very few, people concerned; but now.... Trans men are no problem; it is the trans women who make all the fuss, insisting they be called women and given access to all-female settings, where of course many women do not want them. They bring masculine aggression to these debates, or rather the refusal of a debate: "women" without wombs are women, no discussion allowed. Hence all the hullabaloo about J. K. Rowling, and now Baroness Falkner, who emphasise biology and the right to privacy of real women. Even in the Green Party a powerful faction prevents any discussion of this issue. The SNP took a similar line, until bewildered by a rapist who then said "I'm a woman!" I admit that trans women are often attacked and brutalised, but they forfeit my sympathy by their clamour. They do need protection; but women need protection from them.

Another account of this week's trail

Elderly balding Hasher, with assistance of daughter, lays trail high up steep hill, returning along bottom of same hill, plus a game of chicken on A25 for those suffering symptoms of thirst.

Raffles says:

That bloke Emily Bridges thinks that dogs should be allowed to compete against bitches and accuses British cycling of "genocide". What's he smoking? His 651 word "rant" on Twitter has been described as hysterical (not in the funny sense of the word).

The word "hysterical" derives from a problem with the womb, which is rather ironic, isn't it?! The woof woof have separated gender from sex (more fool them), so now the authorities can go back to saying that those with "XX" chromosomes have a safe space for women and anything else is "open".

British Cycling did not go far enough, however, because in "non-competitive events" (this includes a special women's group) dogs can still play amongst the bitches. Inclusion and fairness are irreconcilable concepts yet they felt the need to virtue-signal by trumpeting inclusion. I think the rights of the many TRUMP the "entitlement" of the few. It's a crazy mixed up world.

And that was the end of that bollocks.

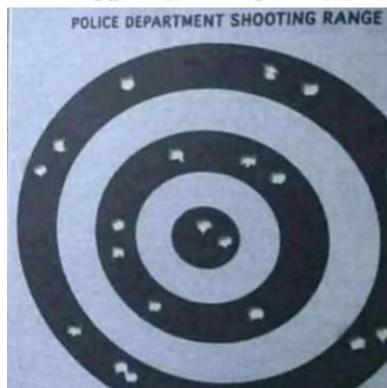

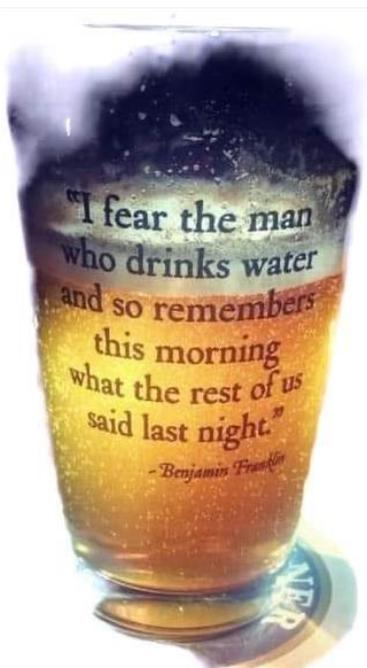

P.S. It's wonderful to see Do You? back on the horse.

Master Bates' lack of trail!

Mad Dogs

And Englishmen....

Did Ratty & Red-Eye drive so slowly that the dirt stayed on their car, or were they so determined to be there last week that they camped overnight?
