(The line that never rings!)

Petal combined his trail and his short cut with consummate mastery, bringing us all together after one hour at the top of a hill. All Chobham Common hares include at least one hill. He had expressed the hope that his trail would prove original; this was largely wishful thinking. SH3 have hashed from Gracious Pond too often for that to be likely, though much of the return from his hill, using the eastern boundary of the Common, was new to me as hashing territory. (J. Arthur and I had been there during the lockdown, when pairs were permitted, even exploring the sinister estate there which Petal thought inappropriate today.)

Now, short-cutters today well outnumbered those who did the main trail. At the very front, ahead of all the others, catching her with less than a mile still to do. We were in at 1230, excellent timing, and the sun continued to shine on our beer; our Uncle Gerry stood in as RA for Le Pro, but as ever I have forgotten his list of sinners.

Watching the early episodes of L'Amica Geniale I was struck to realise that US films seldom or even never depict white poverty. Indeed, in Hollywood anyone who does work has an office, or at least serves in a shop; manual shop floor labour is not shown. You will think of exceptions: The Deer Hunters, though that is largely a war film, On The Waterfront – and then realise how unusual these are. Well, escapism is understandable – “Humankind cannot bear very much reality” – but poverty is now a more real issue than Atalanta, of course, Popeye intermittently, and No Nookie with her son. You may think a son without nookie improbable, but parthenogenesis is a significant feature of Catholicism.... And then following them, Belcher, Master Bates, Fleur d'Or, J. Arthur as Checking Chicken – there was no one behind us to take advantage of his signs! - and myself.

When we were back at Gracious Pond people were comparing estimates of distance; it was striking how few can accurately convert miles into kilometres in their heads. Petal and J. Arthur agreed on 5.7 miles, which is 9.1 Km; No Nookie had 11.2 Km, explaining the difference as her running all the checks. Possible, I suppose, if she got them all wrong, which I doubt; her instincts are excellent.

Dr. Death had done his own thing for most of the trail (and managed to be back with the rest of us); we did meet him at one check where he reported flour behind him, believing it I think to be part of the short-cuts. We could see at once it was our solution.

Petal had put his solutions at perfectly sensible distances from the checks (I even solved the first two myself), with one exception, where the flour was about 10 metres from the check. His short-cuts included one on the return from the hill, though this time the front runners caught up fairly soon, at least with most of them; we were impressed to find Greenpeace striding along well ever, with many households unable to afford food or heat, and a recent budget doing nothing to address these problems. Now, this combines with the war in Ukraine to drive everyone's mind away from the most urgent crisis ever to confront the human race, on which our survival depends, namely global warming; you can see that any more immediate issue will always distract us from that crisis. (The Chancellor's budget speech made no mention of it at all).

Letters to the Editor

Dear Sir,

Although I thoroughly disapprove of the posture of the PC/Woke brigade, I have to express my profound detestation of the Nazi salute that the OnSec gave to Lord Raleigh at the AGM. A photo of this deplorable event was shamelessly published in RS2410. As far as I know, LR, one of our "Hashional Treasures", does not hold fascist views.

On the plus side, I did enjoy the photo of Hornblower shaking my baton.

Yours faithfully, Master Bates HashEd (retired)

"Salutes" ... IF our correspondent had properly framed his picture; he would note that the missing left hand was making the trailing part of the "Usain Bolt" iconic salute having "Won" the auction!

Dear On Sex,

You announced a few weeks ago that you intended to cut down on your work for SH3.

There was a public outcry about one of the stalwarts having a lower profile.

Now that you have three jobs by popular vote, how is it working out for you?

Ash Troll - P

On- Seq Responds: Those "Jobs":

Dear Ms. Troll,

The "Many jobs reduction process" Going quite well!

Step 1, Phase 1; Balls up "Bier Meister": go on Hols, delegate to mental defective, forget to transfer tables and leave extra mugs in the Bongo!

Phase 2; Inadvertently leave beer at home? OR WORSE the Chardonnay??

Phase 3; Sit back and wait for the "Ides of March" - Teq

Seriously Folks:

The Bier Meister activity expanded after Covid Lock downs - quite rightly - to be an opportunity for socialising, That is coming to an end. We need a volunteer to do some of the work - I am "tired"! Teq

Thanks and Appeal

Many thanks should go to Popeye for taking on being the FFH Hare at such a late stage!
 Sadly we are having trouble getting Hares for May and June - MayBall and Jubilee Fridays respectively!
 Any takers? - Teq

I, for a change, arrived ten minutes early, wondering in which of the two large car parks to use, but it was still after Kelinchi and this set the style of the run. Mr & Mrs G (Caryl didn't run) Bods and Flash made up the numbers of our small pack. Popeye arrived before the off and Kelinchi ran off in the wrong direction.

That was the only time we were ahead of her. She soon overtook us and thereafter was a distant figure, sometimes seen but mostly, only heard (Kelinchi, does call). It was a chilly, ever so slightly shiggy but flat trail. Early on Uncle G tried to second guess the trail but Pops, who followed us round, corrected him. A lovely sunset with a circling buzzard added to our enjoyment. Almost half way round the 3.6k trail, Atalanta (even tardier than usual) overtook us! When we saw the enormously large On-Inn, written on a fallen tree, Uncle G and Bods plunged into the brambles and nettles, but to no avail. The real On-Inn was some two hundred metres on.

Kelinchi had shot off home. The rest of us encountered a blazing wood fired chiminea and BBQ in the garden. Popeye tried to remove the top seal of a large Ghost Ship container, but it broke off. No worries, Pops attacked it with a large military looking knife!

Inside, Popeye had prepared a feast, piri piri chicken portions, pesto vegetable bake with a variety of salads, condiments and French sticks.

Well done Popeye, short notice, short run and an excellent evening!

OnOn, Master Bates
